Daily News' account agrees with the above in the main as to the facts, but that paper expresses a contrary opinion as to the hances of saving the vessel. It states . The Hamilla Mitchell is, it appears, wrecked on the S.E. point of the island, and lies firmly imbedded between two rocks, sloping at an angle of about 45 degrees with her fore foot nearly out of the water, and the stern immersed as far as the middle of the davits, at low water. She is listed over on her starboard bilge to seaward, with a rock through her, and hangs so far elevated forward that the sea is on a line with the mixen top and after part of topgallant foreeastle, it is evident the ship will become a total wreck. Unfortunately there is generally a beavy swell, and great caution has to be used in getting on board or in trying to save the immediately under the poop, in a separate compartment by itself. Difference of opinion exists as to the prospects of saving it; but
